YOUNG.

By LINDLEY MURRAY.

From the thirteenth English edition, enlarged and improved by the Author.

Price handsomely bound and lettered, 1 dollar.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE ABOVE WORK.

" We have had frequent occasion to speak of the diligence, good sense, and good intentions, of Mr. Murray; and we congratulate him sincerely on the success of this particular work. We announce this edition, because the alterations and additions are so considerable,
that it is rendered almost a new work."

British Critic, July 1801.

" The examples which Mr. Murray has here selected, and the judicious reflections which accompany them, are such as can scarcely fail to make the best impressions, and to produce the best effects, on all who read them with attention. The present edition of this excellent publication, which has been long known and commended, is enlarged by the addition of twenty-two new characters, filling nearly one hundred pages."

Anti-Jacobin Review, Jan. 1804.

" We have received the tenth and last edition of this valuable work. The improvements made in it, will appear from the author's advertisement. We can only add to this account of the present useful volume, our hope that it will be extensively circulated among our countrymen."

The American Review & Literary Journal,
for July, August & September, 1801.

" On reviewing this book, in its improved form, we find the facts unquestionable and highly interesting—the style correct and neat —and the general tendency of the work such as induces us strongly to recommend it, especially to young readers, who love entertainment mingled with instruction."

Evangelical Magazine, Oct. 1801.

" The rapid sale of this small but valuable collection, has anticipated the commendation
we are desirous to bestow. In an exemplification of more than seventy remarkable characters, many striking examples are exhibited which, in the quiet hour of reflection, man contributes to arrest the careless and wandering; to animate the sincere and virtuous; and to convince or discountenance those who have been unhappily led to oppose the highest truths."

FROM THE ALBANY CRISIS.

NERO, GALBA & NYMPHIDIUS.
A parallel from history.

"Pauca Judicium aut reipublice amor, multi, occulta spe, prout quis amicus vel clientis hunc vel illum ambrosios rumoribus destitabant."

TAC.

NERO was lifted into power by artifice: yet Nero was proclaimed emperor amidst the acclamations of the whole Roman people. The blind multitude, infatuated by their love of novelty, flocked to the temples with thanksgivings, and cried "long live the new emperor," before they knew whether he was likely to be a blessing or a curse to his country. Nero was not without talents—but his, were talents of that anomalous cast which lift their possessor just above contempt without procuring him respect, and while they qualify him for mischief unfit him to be useful; talents that sometimes provoke disgust, and sometimes dereliction. With more sagacity than judgment, and more cunning than wisdom, he knew how to gain popularity, but not how to deserve it.

He saw the enthusiasm that was kindled in his favor, and the first acts of his administration were calculated to fan it into a phrenzy. Demagogues always commence hypocrites. Nero began his reign with an ostentation of great regard to the memory of his predecessor—even went to his tomb—and in a funeral oration pronounced by himself, proposed to enrol him among the Gods (1) —that very predecessor, says the historian, whom he had before reviled in the basest manner, and whose measures he afterwards trampled under foot. (2) His inaugural speech, was a master-piece of political cunning. It met the wishes and received the applause of all parties, for in that, he declared, that having been unconcerned in the civil commotions, he knew of no distinction between the people, and came to the throne with a single eye to the welfare of his country. (3) Although he was sensible that age did not merit had been regarded in preferring him to Britannicus, yet the senate might be assured that he had chosen for his model the great Augustus, who had left the commonwealth "in the full tide of successful experiment" (4)—the senate decreed him thanks—nay—ordered his speech to be engraved on a column of solid silver and to be annually rehearsed to the consuls. (5) But Nero did not stop with bare professions.—The high salaries fixed by the Papian law were complained of; he actually reduced them three fourths. (6) The factions had growed about oppressive taxes; he remitted two fifths of all the taxes upon slaves, and others he entirely took off. (7)

In short—there was no abuse—no pretended grievance, which he did not actually correct or redress. Such disinterested regard and love for the people had Nero! they were not ungrateful. He was hailed Father of his country. The tide of his popularity rose to the highest swell. Thanksgivings and festivals—statues and altars, were decreed by the senate, till adulation was exhausted in heaping honors upon his name. (8)

But mark the sequel. It is the sunny day that brings forth the adder. Patriotism in Nero, was an exotic that could not take root. His prosperity wilted it, and unmasked his character. He knew that the stupid credulity of the people, when once enlisted on the side of a favorite, sanctifies his very crimes. And being weary of constraint, he seized the moment, to let loose a host of foul and frivolous passions that had lain together and engendered in his breast, until now they came forth a monstrous brood! and made him at once odious and contemptible. His after life was one continued scene of folly, baseness, lewdness, impiety and extravagance.

Notwithstanding he was married to an amiable and virtuous lady of the highest rank, his vulgar lust led him to an amour with Acte, his freedwoman—and in spite of all decency—in spite of universal abhorrence and contempt, he took her to his bed! (9) Even his sycophants were shocked—but they dared not to remonstrate, lest, diverted from her, he should seize upon ladies of virtue and rank. (9) But even this precaution was ineffectual. No virtue, no rank, was secure from his ferocious passions. The beautiful,—the accomplished Poppea Sabina, the wife of his most intimate friend, he treacherously seduced, and then adding cowardice to perfidy, bought his peace with an ignominious price. (10)

In public life he was no less despicable. No sooner was he established on the throne, than he contrived to ruin the very persons whose intrigue had lifted him into power—not openly—for this was impracticable,—But by feigning a panic—by pretending that a conspiracy was formed against his life, & a revolution projected in the empire. (11) A project, says the historian, so absurd, that no one was stupid enough to believe it.

He next drove from the government all the old and faithful officers who had devoted their lives to the public service. And for what reason? Merely because they withheld their applause from his vices and follies. (12) Vices and follies that wasted the public treasure and degraded the commonwealth.

Their places he supplied with flatters, dancers, and actors! (13) Vagabonds without principle, without property, without character. But Nero was a patron of the frivolous arts. For he himself was master of all the frivolous accomplishments of his age. He was a dancer, a singer, a sculptor, a painter, a charioteer, a poet, a rhetorician, an actor, a fiddler, and, it would seem from the historians (14) a philosopher. Nay, we have these proofs of it: he projected a canal from the lake Avernus to the mouth of the Tiber, a distance of more than 150 miles through a ridge of rocks, which was just as practicable as to make vessels sail in a dry sea, and ordered home all the convicts from Africa to assist in the enterprise. (15) His attention, however, was soon diverted from this to another which promised equal celebrity and greater profit. On being told by one Bassus, a vagrant adventurer, of a huge cavern in a distant and uninhabited country, which contained immense stores of gold, supposed to be the wealth of queen Dido! lying in massy heaps and towering in columns to a prodigious height. He seized the bubble with avidity, bargained for the mine, and exhausted the public wealth in searching for what was not to be found. He even made assignments on the property and addressed the senate on the value of the purchase. All eyes, and ears, and mouths were open. The emperor could not be deceived. The senate and vast numbers of the people were gulled. Poems and orations were made by his parasites at the next Quinquennial games, in which it was said with admiration that the earth was no longer satisfied with yielding only her usual bounties, but teemed in his reign with productions altogether new—even with treasures already stored. (16)

At another time, when the temple of Janus was shut, and Rome was at peace with all the world, to convince the people of the public prosperity, he ordered 200 ships of corn just arrived from Egypt, the public granary, to be sunk in the Tiber. (17) A famine ensued as might have been expected—and while the citizens were starving in the streets, another ship arrived from the Nile, laden, not with corn, but with sand, to smooth an arena for Nero's experiments. (17) If any further proofs are required, the historian has assured us that he was slovenly and indecent in his appearance, (18) fond of wearing scarlet, (19) and usually went abroad in the same dress he wore at table—his coat hanging loose about him, with a handkerchief swinging round his neck, and even without shoes. (20) Unhappily for home, however, philosophers, rhetoricians and flatters are not always the best rulers.

They are too frequently men of frivolous passions, of narrow views and eccentric notions—men of unthinking prodigality—fond of idle and untried experiments, which they pursue at the expence of the welfare and happiness of the nation. Such was Nero. He found the public treasury full. He squandered several millions in mad projects and left it empty. (21) He found Rome in the highest prosperity; by a public edict he shut up every shop (22) and thus paralyzed trade and robbed the citizens of their bread. Shall I mention his impeachments against the best men of Rome—men who were the pride and ornament of their country? Who has forgotten Pectus Therses, by whose death, says Tacitus, he hoped to extirpate virtue itself. (23) I could dwell upon his impiety against the Gods. For he was an avowed despiser of all religious worship, (24) and defied Jupiter the avenger, although nature herself seemed to frown, although in his reign comets blazed, (25) and the sun struggled under a total eclipse. (25) But I cannot longer descend to detail. The people at length waked from their credulity. They had mistaken professions for principle. They saw and they felt they had been deceived. (26)

Nero now hoped by a timely retreat to save himself from "the" public vengeance. Yes—after proscribing all merit and worth—after bursting all the ties of nature and patriotism—after trampling upon public decency and prostrating the national honor—after he had brought Rome to the very door of destruction, he hoped to escape the indignation of the people, by sneaking away into obscurity and retirement. He stole off, says the historian, to Phaon's Villa, four miles from Rome, masqued up in an old cloak, without even a shoe to his foot; without even a friend to attend or pity him, or even an enemy to relieve him by poison or the sword. There, crawling into a hole, he lay down covered with guilt and remorse—bemoaning his miserable lot, and breathing out this wretched, contemptible exclamation, "Quis Artifex perco?" (27)

Let us now look to the empire. Just before Nero's fall, when it was foreseen that he must inevitably retreat, there appeared two competitors for the throne. Nymphidius, Nero's freedman (28) and old Galba, governor of Spain. (29)

Galba had arrived at that period of life when ambition is usually frozen along with the other passions. He was seventy years old (30)—But he was prevailed upon by a young man of head strong ambition to suffer himself to be proposed for the throne. (31) This was not, however, until Galba had declared against Nero, and the propretor himself had called the emperor "a pitiful harper." (32) Old men are always cautious; sometimes they are cunning. Even then old Galba did not come out openly. Although the soldiers saluted him emperor, he still declared that he was only lieutenant of the Senate and people of Rome. (33) Nay, he waited till the last moment; until the contest was actually decided by the defeat of Nymphidius, before he would assume the Toga. (34) Nor was this all. He even tried to defraud time. For notwithstanding he was so feeble and decrepit as to sink down under the weight of his own armor, (35) yet, when his looks were complimented as still florid and vigorous, he assumed a youthful air, and replied in a short Greek verse, "my strength as yet feels no decay." (36)

With such craft, with so much simulation and dissimulation, had old Galba been a few years younger, he must not only have secured the empire to himself, but have left his favorite firm on the throne. But it was now his misfortune to be implicitly governed by two men, both of aspiring and profligate character, Titus Vinius and Cornelius Laco. (37) Men equally obnoxious to all good citizens by their arrogant and fierce ambition.

Nymphidius, on the contrary, was in the prime of life. He was a freedman of Nero, and by imitating the vices and the follies of his master, had been a great favorite at court. He was besides on the spot, and held one of the first offices at Rome (38). All these advantages he possessed over his rival; he improved them to the best purpose. He took advantage of old Galba's absence to court the senate. Gave expensive entertainments—flattered some with hopes of family aggrandizement, and others with prospects of great power and wealth. (39) The senate were inclined to favor Nymphidius. Yes, Nymphidius! who, in the better days of Rome, says Tacitus, could not have attained to the rank of a common centurion, now, by combining with the profligate and desperate, dared to aspire to the whole Roman empire. (40) But he still feared the influence of Galba—and was constrained to couple their names together and pretend that he and Galba were in alliance & would share the government without dispute. (41)

To the soldiers, however, he was more open. For to them he had distributed largesses, and was himself commander of all the guards. (42) Whenever they named old Galba, Nymphidius would laugh at his grey head, and wrinkled face—artfully acknowledging that "he was indeed an old man of mild and moderate sentiments"—but suggesting at the same time, that "instead of using his own judgment, he would be directed in his administration by those two miscreants Titus Vinius and Cornelius Laco." (43) Such was the state of the two great parties that distracted the Roman empire, when a third sprung up under Virginus Rufus, [a patriot worthy of the old republic] and held the balance of power. (44)

All men of virtue and honesty—all who sighed for the calamities of their country or wished for the return of social order. All who preferred the mild reign of laws to the spasms of faction, and the intemperate fury of civil commotions, flocked to the standard of Virginus. The whole of Germany, of Gaul and several other provinces, declared for the patriot party.

Both Galba and Nymphidius were alarmed. Both, in turn, made overtures to Virginus, and each proposed a coalition. But Virginus, considering both equally profligate and abandoned—equally regardless of the welfare of their country, and staving off only for personal aggrandizement, rejected their proposals with scorn, and kept proudly aloof from the conflict. He and the patriots who were with him resolved, if it were possible, to snatch their bleeding country from the unhallowed grasp of faction. But they would not basely compromise her rights and bargain with public robbers for a share in the plunder. They were engaged in a sacred cause. They would not pollute it, by leaguings with traitors against the public liberty! No. They would rather perish—Qui caput—ille sinit.

PROVIDENCE, R. I. October 28.

MORE TYRANNY.

We understand that the district attorney of this district has received instructions to cause all vessels to be seized and libelled which shall be found in whole or part loaded, unless such vessel shall have first obtained permission of the collector of the port in which she is, to load and proceed on a voyage to some port which shall have been named to the collector previous to the commencement of her taking in a cargo.

BALTIMORE, November 2.

Arrived, brig Greenwich, Weems, 23 days from St. Pierre, Martinique.

Sailed in co. with brigs Actress and Ann for New York. October 6, in lat. 13, for Portsmouth, N. H. short of provisions, informed us that a day or two before they left in with a French sloop of war and 2 brigs from Guadaloupe, bound to France, took out some rum and provision; they also put on board the captain and crew of the brig Julia Ann, Lee, from St. Vincent's bound for New York, which they had taken and sailed the day before. The captain complained of being short of provisions and requested to take off some of those men, we complied by taking three, and the remainder were put on board the Ann and Actress for New York. Off Montserrat was boarded by the British frigate Ethalion and sloop of war Wanderer and strictly examined.

Extract

"It is a general sentiment which is given by the Liberator, Gen. A.

CIRCULAR.

THE Corresponding Committee for the county of Augusta, encouraged by our own ideas of consistency, and by communications from different parts of the State of Virginia, have formed the annexed Federal Ticket.

THIS Ticket would have made its appearance in Mr. Davis's paper of the 18th instant, published in Richmond, if it had not been arrested, by a committee of federalists at that place, to us unknown, through the whole progress of our proceedings; and which really seems to have been brought into existence by the arrival at that place of the ticket made out by us. We presume not to date for that committee, nor for any portion of our federal brethren, but we mean to act consistently with ourselves, and to vote for those men and those only whom we wish to succeed, and to give to our federal brethren throughout the state the same opportunity. We deprecate the idea of voting otherwise, and we have no hesitation in saying, that the course recommended by the committee at Richmond, is calculated to insult the feelings of the man they advocate, inasmuch as the avowed object is, not that he should succeed, but that his name should be made use of to defeat the election of his opponent, in this state. We are not disposed to injure the feelings of that gentleman, or any other, but we have a desire to adhere to the principle we set out with, and therefore although the time previous to the election is too short to promise much, we nevertheless, submit to our brethren the following ticket.

The President of the United States has returned an answer to the petition of the citizens of Schenectady, requesting a suspension of the embargo. It is an exact copy of his answer to all the former petitions on that subject. It was laid before the petitioners by their chairman, at a meeting held for that purpose, on the 13th instant; when the following resolution (among others) was unanimously adopted:

"RESOLVED, That this meeting do conceive the answer of the President of the U. States to the memorial addressed him by the citizens of Schenectady, to be unsatisfactory, and totally destitute of that sympathy and feeling which ought to characterize the chief magistrate of these states, and view it as an evasion calculated to impose on the understanding of the ignorant and mislead the credulous."

A committee was then appointed to draft a memorial to congress, and to circulate the same for signatures throughout the city.

[North Amer.]

Extract of a letter from a gentleman at Paris, dated Sept. 5.

"It is a fact that Mr. Skipwith (the consul general) returns to America by the vessel which carries this letter, being recalled by the President on the demand of this government. Mr. Warden, the secretary of Gen. Armstrong, fills up the place."

BE NOT DECEIVED.—An expectation has somehow taken possession of the public mind, that the embargo will soon be raised, and even some important commercial speculations, have been set on foot, in confidence that such would be the fact. We have just seen a letter from a person in the treasury department at Washington, to a gentleman of respectability in this city, in which are these words, (but I speak from memory) "an opinion has gone abroad, that the embargo will be raised soon after the meeting of congress—I have no idea that it will. I cannot conceive on what basis this expectation is founded."

[New-York pap.]

SPAIN.....The fate of the world seems to hang upon the decision of the battle expected to be fought between the armies of Bonaparte and the Spanish patriots. The nations of Europe are looking on in dreadful suspense, without sufficient courage to express their hopes or fears. The panic has reached even this country that ought not to be effected by the wars of Europe. But so it is—No nation but England has courage to offer the right hand of friendship to the oppressed Spaniards. If they conquer they conquer alone—to the hand of the Almighty and to their own courage they will owe their success: If they are destroyed—tho' they may perish without the pity of the pretended friends of universal liberty; they will extort the admiration of the world, and the history of their exertions will be read, when the pusillanimous acts of some of their enemies are forgotten.

[Bal. Fed. Rep.]

THE SPANISH MINISTER.

The government papers inform us that the Spanish government has appointed Don SANTIAGO as minister to the U. States. We rejoice at such an evidence of good disposition towards this country from the patriots of Spain—the more, because it will be the means of fairly testing the sentiments of our cabinet towards the Spanish nation. Bonaparte has declared the Spaniards to be rebels, he has appointed his brother Joseph a king to rule over them, and required all the powers on the continent to acknowledge him as the lawful sovereign of Spain—we are therefore particularly anxious for the decision of the interesting point of Mr. Jefferson's entire devotion to a TYRANT, and hostility to the brave and injured Spaniards. The proper reception of SANTIAGO will be an acknowledgment of the independence of his government; his rejection equivocal to a declaration against the REBELS. The trial will be severe to our cabinet, and we believe they dread its approach.

(Fed. Repub.)

Saragossa, where the Spanish patriots gained a victory over the French, is a place famous in the history of Spain for the great victory obtained there in the 16th century by Ferdinand of Arragon, over the Moors, of whom immense numbers were slain and thrown into a chasm of the mountains which has since been called El Barranco de los Muertos, the ditch of the slain. The French have also some reason to remember it, having been defeated there with great loss in the succession war by the British and Portuguese, under general Stanhope.

PRIVATE CORRESPONDENCE.
OF THE REGISTER.

The following is an extract of a letter from Vera Cruz dated Aug. 20, 1808, to a gentleman in this city:

"This port continues as usual to be shut against foreign vessels; and although we received the English as our friends, we do not allow them the free trade as you suppose—all exclusive grants and privileges given by our last administration have ceased."

From the Federal Gazette.

MR. HEWES.

I perceive that the Federal Editors generally give us the paragraphs from the "National Intelligencer," as official annunciations, or as hints; but as a matter of course, it being the government Gazette. In your last extract from that paper it was stated, that government had made such propositions to the belligerents as would extort the praise of all federalists, and rally the whole people round the administration. Now, permit me sir, to doubt this. I ask Mr. Smith, did Mr. Jefferson make the proposal to raise the embargo as to England, if she remove her orders as to us, without connecting with that offer certain conditions which we all know England will never consent to? A London opposition print declares, that we demand of England the formal renunciation of the right to search our merchant ships; that without this our present rulers will not raise the embargo. Let Mr. Intelligencer answer to this without prevarication; before he demands the undivided plaudits of the FEDERALISTS.

Another hit at Mr. Jefferson.—The editor of the Whig, the Ainslie of Baltimore, who a few days since charged Mr. Jefferson with meanness, contemptible, introduces the subjoined article from a London paper in these words—"An enemy's sneer—or the effect of CRINGING, dispatc boat policy." As the democrats have had all the credit for elevating Mr. Jefferson to his present dignity, let them now have equal credit for abusing him as the veriest of scoundrels.—New-York paper.

NO APOLOGY
 Will be necessary to offer the public for putting off the drawing of the Trinity Church Lottery,
 As is sometimes the case with other Lotteries.
C. & R. WAITE, Assure the public that the drawing of the above Lottery will positively take place on the first day of November next, and be commenced at the rate of 2000 tickets per week, till completed, and under no pretence whatever, will the drawing be delayed—G. & R. Waite also deem it necessary to acquaint the public that they never have, nor never will publicly advertise the sale of Tickets in any Lottery but of such as they can confidently recommend for punctuality of drawing—the late St. Mary's College Lottery, and the present Trinity Church Lottery, are the only two lotteries sold at New York, that the above firm have yet had any concern in—and they trust the Trinity Church Lottery will be entitled to the same credit for punctuality as was the late St. Mary's College Lottery.
